Meanie Babies

Taking a page from the book of Topps' parodies, Comic Images pokes fun at the Beanie Baby phenomenon. Cards will feature characters like Upchuck the Duck, E Coli the Baby Bacteria, Litters the Cat and Velcro the Crow. John Pound, who was the brainchild of Garbage Pail Kids during the mid-1980s, came up with the set that's putting some fun back into the hobby.

Sports Time extends Monroe redemption card cut-off dates indefinitely

Sports Time has announced it has extended the redemption deadlines indefinitely for Marilyn Monroe Series I Diamond Cards and Series II Ruby Cards.

Redemption cards should be sent to Sports Time at: P.O. Box 4424, Carson, CA 90749.

Revamped lineup: Sports Time has revamped its entire card product lineup. Playboy Chromium Covers Series II, which was slated for October, will now be issued in January.

Playboy's Best of Jenny McCarthy will hit the streets in late January or early February. It was to be released in November.

Melrose Place, which has suffered through numerous delays and was supposed to be released in November, has been given a generic release date of early 1998. Originally scheduled for December, Playboy October will most likely be released in February, according to the company.

Diamond, Lennon figures produced by Gartlan USA

Neil Diamond and John Lennon figurines will be released by Gartlan USA. The company will produce 1,000 nine-inch autographed figurines of Diamond that will be priced at $295.

In addition, 1,000 10¼-inch autographed plates will be priced at $225.

Gartlan will issue 2,000 pewter figurines of Lennon, which will be priced at $495.

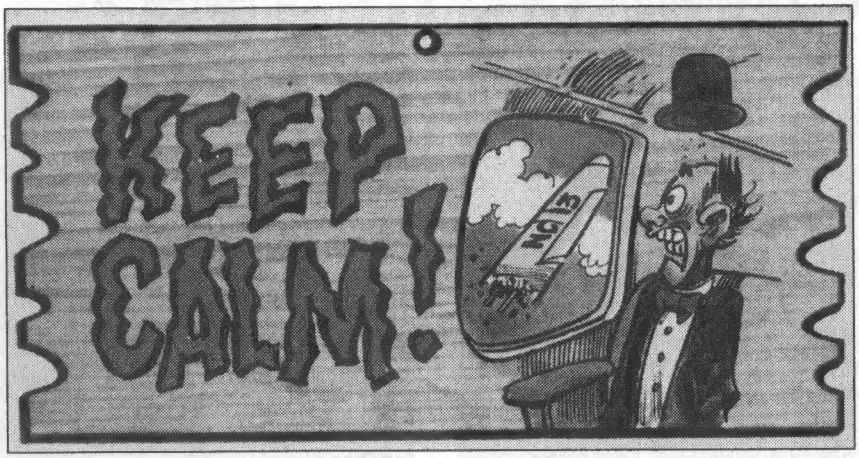
Also, 300 artist proofs will be released. Each will feature a photo-etched signature of Lennon.

Gartlan issued 5,000 smaller versions of the Lennon figurine, which will be sold for $125.

For more information, call Bob Gartlan at (609) 753-9229.

Entertainment Cards EXTRA

turning back the clock



1959 Topps Wacky Plaks

Cards in set: 88.

Card fronts: A one- or two-line joke or phrase along with color artwork was printed over a woodgrain-type background. The "plak" is notched on both sides. An area for a tack hole is printed at the top center.

Card backs: The backs also include the woodgrain background, along with the typical postcard information. The "plak" number and "Wacky Plak" are printed in the upper left inside a circle. Artwork appears in the lower left.

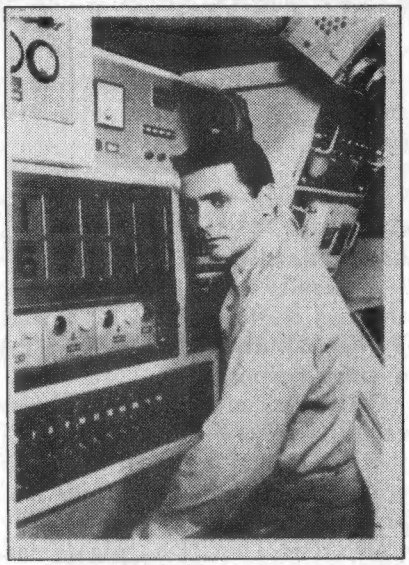
Card size: 2½ x 4⅝ inches.

Set value: $210-$230.

Single card value: $2-$3.

Set notes: In 1965, Topps re-released the set as Kookie Plaks. Each "plak," however, featured a different number. In addition, Topps contracted the series out to Scanlens in Australia and to England's A&BC company. Both of these overseas sets include markings which allows for easy identification. The Scanlens set included only 84 cards.

The Topps "plaks" were sold in five-cent packs with bubble gum.



'64 Donruss Voyage to Bottom of the Sea

Cards in set: 66.

Card fronts: Black-and-white photos from the TV series are framed by white borders.

Card backs: The card caption, details and number are printed inside a rectangle in the upper right corner. The bottom includes the submarine and the TV show's logo. A circle in the lower right features the words, "Series I Numbers 1-66." However, Series II was never produced. The backs are printed in dark blue and white.

Card size: 2½ x 3½ inches.

Set value: $225-$250.

Single card value: $3-$5.

1963 Topps Monster Midgees

Cards in set: 153.

Card fronts: A black-and-white photo anchors the front of the card, while a humorous caption is printed beneath the photo. They are framed by a black line. The cards feature white borders.

Card backs: Printed horizontally, the backs have the card number in the upper left inside a tombstone. "Monster Laffs" appears to the right of the tombstone. A joke appears in the center of the card. A black stripe at the bottom features copyrights for American International Pictures, which provided the photos, and for Topps.

Card size: 1⅞ x 2½ inches.

Set value: $250-$300.

Three-card value: $5-$12.

Set notes: The cards were printed in three-card perforated strips and sold in 12-card packs for five cents. Because of the printing on the backs, some collectors have named this set "Small Monster Laffs." Topps took the 66 best photos from the Midgees set and reused them in the "Monster Laffs" set later that year. These cards are standard sized.

MARKET REPORT

By Kurt Samuels

Lack of products at retailers caused disinterest in 1997

The new year is almost here. In the entertainment card industry 1997 couldn't have left any sooner.

Despite some interest in summer movie card releases, the industry was bogged down by uninteresting product and unenthusiastic collectors.

"Basically, there is nothing that interests me to actually go out and buy," said collector Fred Hamer of suburban Detroit.

Hamer was one of nearly two dozen dealers, collectors and hobby watchers contacted to find out what sets, chase cards and companies were the most exciting and best for 1997.

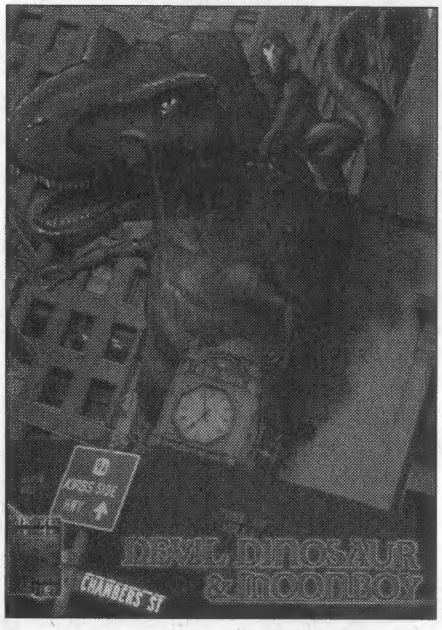
As it turned out, there was no stand out series for this year.

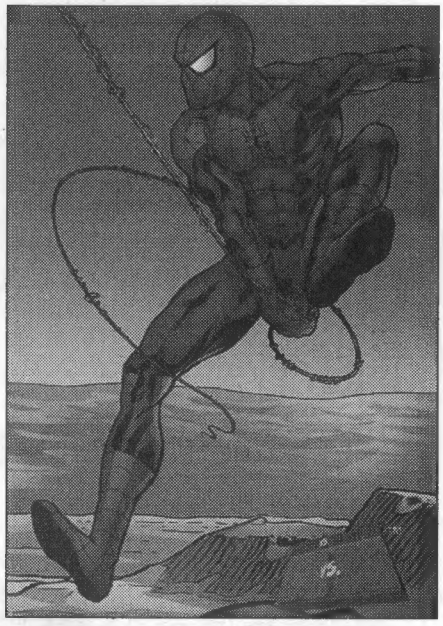
Set of the year: There were 23 people contacted and nine different answers. The answer that was the most common: None.

Five people believed there was no set that stood out this past year.

Granted, while five people in a non-formal survey has as much influence on the industry as does a Diet Coke in reducing the calorie content on a Big Mac extra value meal, it does show that people who know the industry and do collect cards are not excited about what has happened this past year.

And if you can't get the people who collect excited about cards, how do you expect a 12-year-old kid to plop down $1.50 for a pack of cards?





Other than Marvel QFX and Marvel vs. WildStorm, there were no other comic book-related sets which caught collectors' attention.

What has caused this disinterest?

Here are a few reasons:

1. Other than Marvel QFX and, possibly, Marvel vs. Wildstorm, there were no comic book-related card sets that got fans excited.

Comic books and entertainment cards do go hand-in-hand. Those that follow comics know that industry is in even worse shape than the card market.

There wasn't even a single DC series released this year. Others like Lady Death and Ghost did attract the usual audience, but it didn't go beyond that crowd.

Until a hot comic book takes off, it may be awhile before comic cards are exciting again.

2. There was no major release that attracted the attention of national retailers. No matter how much collectors and dealers curse the Wal-Marts of the world, if not for the national retailers, there is no market.

Collectors and dealers may like 400-box production runs, but, that ain't going to pay the bills accumulated by the card manufacturers.

There was a perfect license that could have captured this market in 1997: Rugrats.

I know I've said this before, but Rugrats were extremely hot this year.

What caused disinterest in the hobby in 1997?

1. Other than Marvel QFX and, possibly, Marvel vs. Wildstorm, there were no comic book-related card sets that got fans excited. Lady Death and Ghost did attract the usual audience, but it didn't go beyond that crowd.

2. There was no major release that attracted the attention of national retailers. No matter how much collectors and dealers curse the Wal-Marts of the world, if not for the national retailers, there is no market.

3. There are just too many sets of the same licenses. This is the most common complaint in the industry. How many more Star Wars and Star Trek sets can be produced before even loyal fans wise up and say, "Enough is enough?"

4. The lack of quality independent card manufacturers. Because of the slow market, less and less people are producing sets. Thus, all the cool sets that popped up earlier in the decade, such as Cottage Cards' Dinosaurs set and even the Kitchen Sink boxed sets were missing.

Let's put it this way, I spent nearly $200 on Rugrats merchandise this year on my daughter, ranging from games, puzzles, clothing, dolls, videos and even gum and birthday cakes.

In addition to the merchandise, there were new Rugrats cartoons released, along with a Rugrats balloon in Macy's Thanksgiving Day parade.

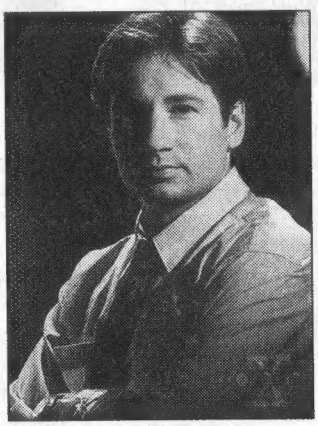
Tempo supposedly released a Rugrats set, but I never saw it in stores. That's the problem. If the set was released, it most likely went to card shops. Unfortunately, the non-collecting kids and their parents don't go to card shops, they go to the local Wal-Mart.

There's another chance to catch the Rugrats buzz for 1998. A new feature movie will be in theaters next Thanksgiving. Nickelodeon has already began plugging it on the network.

3. There are just too many sets of the same licenses. This is the most common complaint in the industry.

How many more Star Wars and Star Trek sets can be produced before even loyal fans wise up and say, "Enough is enough?"

Now even The X-Files and Babylon 5 are falling into a similar fate.



Has the X-Files license fallen into the same rut as Star Wars and Star Trek, where collectors are saying, "Enough is enough?"

4. The lack of quality independent card manufacturers. Because of the slow market, less and less people are producing sets. Thus, all the cool sets that popped up earlier in the decade, such as Cottage Cards' Dinosaurs set and even the Kitchen Sink boxed sets were missing.

Chase card of the year: The Mira Furlan "error" card from the Babylon 5: Special Edition set receives this honor.

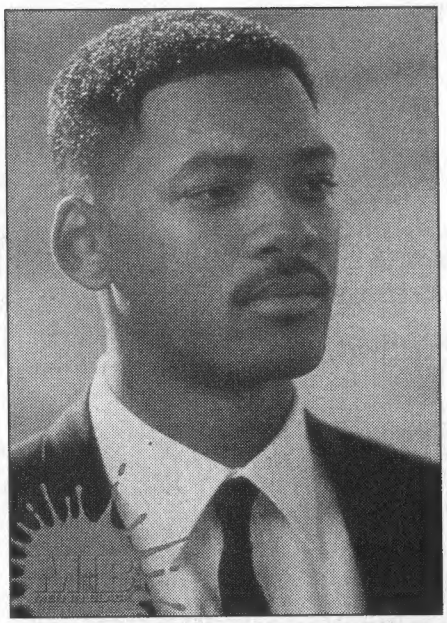
It wasn't so much for the card, which was pretty bland, but because of the whole story behind it and the frenzy that followed made the card more interesting than it really was.

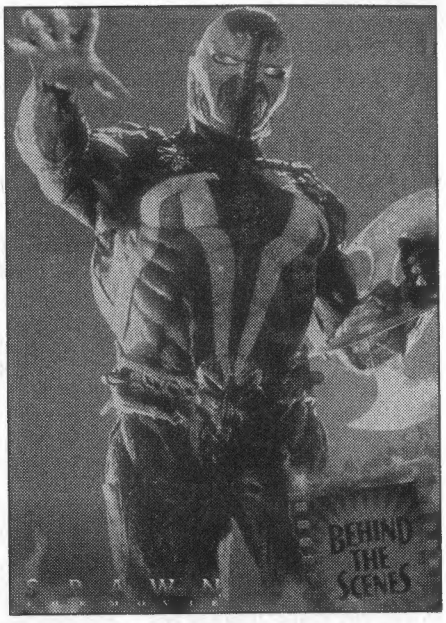
The card was never meant to be inserted into packs, said a Fleer spokesperson.

Instead these cards were supposed to be given to Furlan for her work with the set.

However, some entered the print run. Scorned dealers, who were seeking the autographed case card but didn't get it, said the Furlan card was produced to take that card's place.

But, our favorite rumor is that Furlan herself was setting up at shows and selling the cards for $25 each. Yeah, she was sitting over by the guy who had the mustard stain on the front of his shirt.





Inkworks received half of the votes for best card company because of its two hit movie card sets from last summer – "Men in Black" and "Spawn."

Company of the year: This was pretty clear cut, as Inkworks finished with more than half the votes.

Despite the margin of victory (seven votes), most of the voters picked Inkworks for being able to hit paydirt with such movie sets as "Men in Black" and "Spawn."

The next card company to receive votes was Dart, which produces quality limited sets but can't seem to draw interest other than from hard-core card collectors.

Other awards for 1997:

The "Turn a disaster into a profit" award: Why do card dealers carry the same level of disdain among consumers as do lawyers and Paparazzi?

Here's why. A Wisconsin card dealer turned the death of Princess Diana into major cash.

It seems the morning of Diana's death, this dealer was at a card show where he spotted sets of Royal Family cards from Press Pass being sold at $3 each.

This dealer, seeing a possible business windfall, purchased all 20 sets available for a total of $60.

The dealer then took those sets and sold them for $50 each that afternoon.

In addition, this dealer took individual cards from the set and sold them for as high as $10 each.

Thus, a $60 investment by the dealer earned more than $1,000. Some people don't have a conscience.

The "Longest between series releases" Award: Bench Warmers.

The first series was released in 1992, followed by a second series in 1993. Four years later Series III is released. Why?

However, the set has been a decent seller for dealers across the country.

Best independent set: The Pennsylvania State Police set. This seven-card set which featured the different areas of the state police department was distributed to kids in the state.

What made the set unique was that the police used $4,975 in federal drug forfeiture money to produce the cards.

Talk about government intervention to save this industry.

Couch potato heaven

Inkworks' TV's Coolest Classics card set focuses on five comedies from the 1960s

By Tom Hultman

Any collector who has casually kept an eye on the direction of the entertainment card hobby has seen the manufacturers looking backwards with their new card products.

Classic James Bond, Beatles, "The Munsters" and "Battlestar Galactica" each have hit the hobby in the past year, with "Gilligan's Island" and a second "Munsters" series on the way in early 1998.

Inkworks has gotten in on the retro wave with its TV's Coolest Classics Volume One set which spotlights five shows – "Brady Bunch," "Andy Griffith," "Get Smart," "Hogan's Heroes" and "Beverly Hillbillies" – that we watched during our childhood.

The 90-card set will be released Jan. 28.

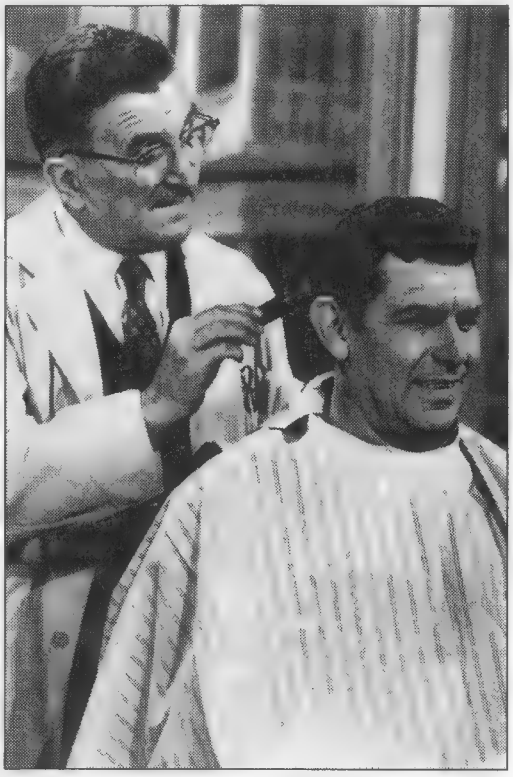
"We saw there was definitely a demand in the marketplace for a set like this," Inkworks executive vice president Martha Modlin said. "We're seeing an increase in sales of anything having to do with classic TV properties.

"In fact, there was a radio show I heard recently that said ornaments based on retro shows are selling out everywhere. There's definitely a resurgence and probably due to Nick at Night where all these folks are watching and rewatching these classic TV shows and they want merchandise behind it."

However, Inkworks is putting a different spin on its treatment of a retro set.

Not only is the company focusing on five shows instead of one, Inkworks is also breaking the base set into a handful of subsets, including Fab Fashions, Dating Game, Premieres, Family Affairs, Good Times, Spies Like Us, TV Dinners, Zoo Crew and Kid Stuff.

By doing this, Inkworks stays away from redoing a card set based on an old show. After all, each of the shows featured in Coolest Classics has already been showcased on a card set in the past.



Just a little off the top, Floyd

The shows: Andy Griffith, Brady Bunch, Get Smart, Hogan's Heroes and Beverly Hillbillies.

Number of cards in the set: 90 cards broken down into 10 subsets, including Fab Fashions, Classic Quotes and others.

Memorable Moments: Nine cards that made us laugh or cry; 1:11 packs.

Dream Girls: Six cards featuring the girls who always seemed larger than life in the eyes of the men who adored them; 1:20 packs.

Smell-O-Rama: Three scratch-and-sniff cards that have the sights and smells of Aunt Bea's Cherry Pie, Greg Brady's new car and Maxwell Smart's shoe.

Signed cards: Barbara Feldon, Susan Olsen, Barry Williams, Ann B. Davis, Donna Douglas, Robert Clary, Betty Lynn and Elinor Donahue. Each actor and actress signed 600 cards apiece.

35th Anniversary Beverly Hillbillies card: Included exclusively with TV's Coolest Classics Collectors Album.

By doing the Coolest Classics set in a subset format, it gives the old TV shows a fresh look on cards.

"It gives a chance to let us have a little bit more fun with the set," Modlin said. "Some of these shows have already been done in card sets. Granted, it was 20 or 30 years ago, but we're not trying to tell a story. Now we're just giving tidbits of our favorite shows or fun facts or different subsets that we've put together just to make it more fun."

According to Modlin, the Inkworks' staff sat down with all of the photos available from the shows and then decided which subsets would fit the bill.

"We had the pictures first and tried to group them on things that made sense," she said. "Fab Fashions made sense and Classic Quotes made sense, because you had Jan saying, 'Marcia, Marcia, Marcia' and Sergeant Schultz with 'I know nothing.' Those are ones you immediately think about.

"The TV Dinners subset is a lot of fun and just talking about food. The Premieres subset talks about the first episode when the show first hit or showing that graphic that you would instantly recognize at the beginning of the show.

"It was just taking the photos and grouping them into subsets that made sense."

Modlin said Inkworks chose the five shows because of their coverage of the 1960s, beginning with the innocence of "The Andy Griffith Show" in the early decade to the "Brady Bunch" with the groovy shirts and pants of the late decade.

"It gave us a good mix from the shows of that period," Modlin said.

Of course, when a company has to fill a set with photos based on shows of the past there are three problems to overcome – finding enough quality imagery, while keeping black-and-white photos to a minimum, coming up with new nuggets of information for the card backs and securing the rights to the main characters of each of the shows.

Modlin said Inkworks worked with a group of writers who not only knew the material very well but had personal collections of photos and connections.

"We were able to go beyond the sometimes limited group (of photos) that the licensor had and actually go with some of these great photographs (that other sources had) that you've never seen on trading cards before," she said.

One thing about a card set based on old shows is a company can write generic, boring backs for the cards or they can take the effort to track down experts who know just about every detail about each episode.

Inkworks talked to collectors and fan club members via the Internet to find out what had to be in the set. From there, the company set out to do its best to find the images and put them on the cards.

"These are the people that in essence live it," Modlin said. "These are the fans. They know better than I what all these guys said and which episode is which. You have to be real careful that you get it right.

"There are some images that were either publicity shots and others that you've never seen before. There are shots that will instantly remind you of that episode. That was our goal.

"We even went back once all the images were scanned in and made sure that the images were the right way and not flipped. That's the kind of effort we put into this set."

Fleer issued a Hogan's Heroes set in 1965.

History repeats itself

The five shows in Inkworks' TV's Coolest Classics set each have been featured on card sets in the past. They are as follows: Beverly Hillbillies (1963 Topps and 1993 Eclipse), Hogan's Heroes (1965 Fleer), Get Smart (1966 Topps), Brady Bunch (1969 Topps) and Andy Griffith (Pacific 1990-91)

Inkworks was able to secure the rights to the major stars of each of the five shows. However, a few guest stars slipped through the cracks.

"In fact, for some of the shows we actually had to go to the individual actors themselves and secure their rights separately because not all the rights were secured by Paramount at the time," Modlin said. "There's probably some people that you'll notice aren't in there because we weren't able to do it. There definitely was some legwork involved in putting this set together."

The most notable people missing from the set include the female guest stars from Hogan's Heroes.

"We were trying to get a female from each of the shows and we weren't able to do it for Hogan's Heroes," she said. "They may not be the main characters, but you might see them missing and that would be why."

Inkworks pulled of a major coup for the set, as it lined up eight stars from the five shows to sign autographs.

Leading the autograph lineup are Barbara Feldon (Agent 99 from "Get Smart"), Susan Olsen (Cindy Brady), Barry Williams (Greg Brady), Ann B. Davis (Alice from "Brady Bunch"), Donna Douglas (Elly May Clampett from Beverly Hillbillies"), Robert Clary (Corporal Louis LeBeau of "Hogan's Heroes"), Betty Lynn (Thelma Lou from "Andy Griffith") and Elinor Donahue (Ellie May Walker from "Andy Griffith").

Each actor and actress signed 600 cards apiece, which will be randomly inserted. Each will be foil-stamped with Inkworks' Security Seal. Each card will be numbered A1-A8.

"I thought getting eight signers was a wonderful response," Modlin said. "There were some people who have been signing for $75 an autograph to do lithographs for a studio and then all of a sudden our deal didn't sound so great.

"There were a couple of people who thought the money wasn't lucrative enough. But I thought we got a bunch of really strong actors and we were able to represent all five shows in the autographs."

Other chase sets include the nine-card Memorable Moments (1:11 packs), Dream Girls (six-cards, 1:20) and the three-card Smell-O-Rama scratch-and-sniff set (1:30).

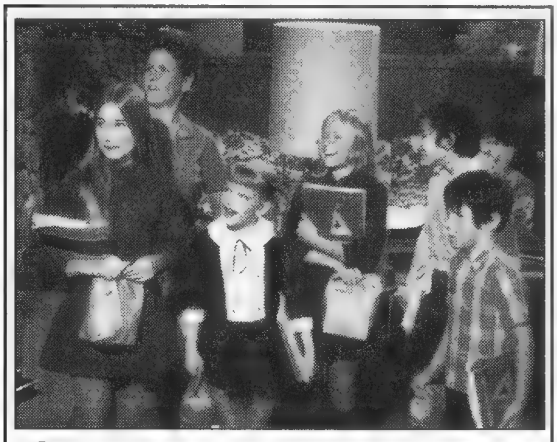
Featured in the scratch-and-sniff set are Aunt Bea's cherry pie, Greg Brady's new car smell and a surprise smell on Maxwell Smart's shoe phone card.

Modlin said the scratch-and-sniff technology came to the forefront when the Inkworks powers-that-be were brainstorming about something fun to put into the card set.

"We were batting around a couple different technologies," she said. "For some reason, the scratch-and-sniff just came up and we thought that would be a fun thing to do. We thought it would be neat to have a card where you could scratch-and-sniff Aunt Bea's cherry pie.

"In fact, the cherry pie card actually has her recipe from the Official Andy Griffith Cookbook that is out there right now and we were able to reprint it."

The set also celebrates the 35th anniversary of the "Beverly Hillbillies" with an embossed, foil-stamped card which is exclusively available with the TV's Coolest Classics Collectors Album.



Chances to win

You have a chance to feel as groovy as the Brady kids as we are offering three boxes and three sets of Inkworks' TV's Coolest Classics card set. All you have to do is send your name, address, city, state and home phone number to: Tom Hultman, Coolest Contest, 700 E. State St., Iola, WI 54990. The deadline is Feb. 7, 1998.

In search of a silver lining

Sales of entertainment cards have fallen dramatically in recent years, but there's reason to believe the worst may be over

By Scott Kelnhofer

Today's entertainment card market is laden with products that delve into the worlds of science fiction and fantasy, worlds that don't really exist.

Unfortunately for many in this segment of the industry, a healthy and profitable world of entertainment cards is also becoming one that doesn't exist.

Four straight years of declining revenues have transformed this segment of the trading card market from one with a bright future to one with a very limited future.

"Right now, we have to assume this is where the market is going to be for a while," said Dino Frisella, president of Quebec-based Dart Flipcards, which has been issuing non-sports cards since 1988.

Where the market "is" is a mere fraction of what it was at its peak in 1994, when entertainment cards generated an estimated $200 million in wholesale revenues. The products released in 1997 will generate an estimated $20-$25 million in wholesale revenues.

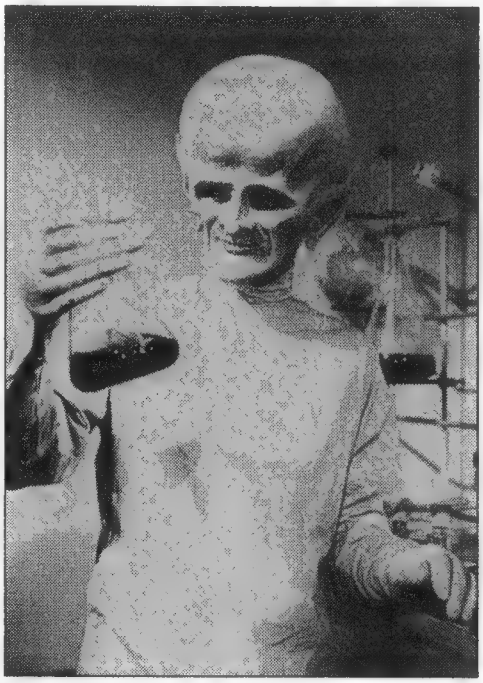
The projections for 1998 revenues are even lower, as almost everyone in the industry plans on cutting back the number of products it issues.

How did a market that held such promise fall so far, so fast? The reasons for the decline aren't all that different from those that have impacted the sports trading card market. Industry experts point to the following factors:

• A Glut of New Products – As the revenues from all trading cards began to grow, more and more companies viewed non-sports as the easy way to get started in the trading card market. Before long, a market that was used to supporting 10-20 new entertainment card sets a year was now being asked to support 150-175 new sets a year.

While many companies contributed to the proliferation of new products, Fleer/SkyBox is often pointed to as the company that overloaded the system.

The merger of Marvel and Fleer in 1992 resulted in an abundance of Fleer entertainment card sets based on characters from the Marvel and DC Comics lines of comic books, such as Superman, Spider-Man, Batman, and X-Men.



The state of today's entertainment card market has forced manufacturers to develop new formulas of doing business. (1997 DuoCards Outer Limits card)

Using the same strategy deployed in its sports card operation, Fleer segmented its entertainment card products, offering base brand, premium and super-premium lines of many of its titles. Initially, the strategy worked.

Entertainment card collectors appreciated the higher quality cards that Fleer was offering. But eventually, the market could not support everything that the company offered, as well as the high print runs of some of those products.

"Fleer killed the Marvel license," said Allan Caplan, president of Inkworks, who also served as a consultant for SkyBox before it was purchased by Fleer. "Marvel is a fine license; it could be described as a great license. But when you have people trying to crank out a different Marvel release every month, you have problems.

"How many different poses of Wolverine coming at you with his razor-blade fingers can a kid buy? That's where you began to see huge drops in revenues for this business."

While some dealers and distributors also blame Fleer/SkyBox for many of the problems the entertainment card market is trying to dig out from today, others point out that trying to blame one company for ruining the market may be an easy way out.

"That's kind of a convenient scapegoat," said Alan Gordon, president of Comic Images in Saddlebrook, N.J. "Did Marvel put hundreds, or even thousands, of stores out of business? I doubt it. What Marvel did was symbolic of the industry.

"Everyone put out a lot of card titles; Marvel put out more because they had a lot of properties. But there were a lot of Disney cards out there that didn't sell, a lot of Comic Images cards that didn't sell or were marginal titles. I don't think it's fair to blame Marvel. If anything, when they were selling a lot of cards, they were reaching a lot of consumers and they were exciting a lot of people."

• Decline of the Comics Industry – Much like sports cards, the 1990s have not been kind to the comic book business. Once an industry that was approaching $1 billion in annual retail sales, comic books now generate an estimated $200 million in annual sales.

Because a number of entertainment card sets issued in recent years have been based on comic-related themes, the decline of the comic book market has had a major impact on sales of entertainment cards.

Another factor to consider: With more comic book shops closing their doors, collectors are left with fewer outlets to purchase entertainment cards, since many comic book shops also carry entertainment cards.

• Rising Popularity Of Gaming Cards – Most dealers will tell you that, especially among their younger customers, gaming cards are now far more popular than standard entertainment cards.

"Trading card games have stolen non-sports sales in this store for the last year and a half," said Jim McCauley, owner of Jimmy Jams in Winona, Minn. "There's a much higher perceived value with trading card games, and kids are buying those instead.

"A non-sports pack might cost you $3, while a Magic pack that costs the same might get you a $15 or $20 card that you can actually do something with. Those cards seem to have more inherent value with them."

While the entertainment card manufacturers admit that gaming cards have stolen some of their market share, they don't feel gaming cards are a major factor in the decline of entertainment cards.

"Blaming the gaming market for taking all of the customers isn't true," said Jerry Bennington, product manager for Krome Productions in Carlsbad, Calif. "A lot of it is just the fact there hasn't been a lot of added value to comic book trading cards, plus there have been some poor quality products being put out by some manufacturers."

• Fewer Cards Sold at Retail Chain Stores – Entertainment card sets are, by nature, designed to appeal to the non-traditional card collector. They are designed to appeal to the fans of the property depicted on the cards, such as Garfield the Cat or the "X-Files."

The best way for card companies to reach non-traditional collectors is by having their products available at retail chain stores or convenience stores. Unfortunately, getting shelf space in those prime locations has never been harder.

"The mass market stores don't have a great love for the entertainment card segment," said Bob Byer, president of Sports Time. "They believe sports cards are where the big sales are.

"Another problem is that there isn't a lot of continuity with entertainment card products. I may have a great product to offer this month, but what happens when it's time to fill that shelf space next month? Sports offers more continuity."

Mass market retailers have also become leery of adding new entertainment card products because of the hit-or-miss nature of the market in recent years. And the bankruptcy struggles at Marvel haven't helped matters.

"There's been a loss of confidence in the company by the mass retailers," admitted Steve Charendoff, entertainment director for Fleer/SkyBox. "Those retailers aren't going to order a lot of your product because they don't want to take the risk that if the company is dissolved, they're going to be stuck with hundreds of cases of product that they can't return."

With a lack of dynamic licenses on the market, manufacturers are turning back the clock, releasing sets like the "Munsters" (Dart Flipcards) and "Lost In Space" (Inkworks).

The bottom line: With fewer hobby shops and mass retailers carrying entertainment cards, the properties that do exist aren't getting much exposure beyond a small group of hard-core collectors. As a result, potential revenues have become quite limited.

"For the collector, this has been both a blessing and a curse," Charendoff added. "There's less product out there and that enhances its collectibility. But it's also put us in a position with some proposed products that we have to say no because we don't have the adequate means of distribution needed to make those products successful."

• Lack of Dynamic Products – The Lion King set, released in 1994 by SkyBox, is regarded as the best selling entertainment card set in history. As much as the industry benefitted from the success of that product, a new problem was created.

"Lion King raised the standards to an unrealistic level," said John Vano, senior product manager for Upper Deck. "It did so well that you always expect to hit or exceed that level, but nothing's even come close."

The key to success in the entertainment card market is securing an "evergreen" property – the kind of property that doesn't fade out after a few weeks or months, but rather lives on with a seemingly endless run of popularity.

Finding such properties is becoming more and more difficult.

Licenses like Star Wars and Star Trek have a loyal following, but they've taken years to establish. A blockbuster movie like "Men In Black" can help spur sales of an "MiB" set while the movie is hot, but many card companies have been burned by paying big money for the rights to the next supposed blockbuster, only to watch the card set fizzle because the movie was a dud.

"Part of the problem is that we, as an industry, are stuck in a mode of putting product out that is not very innovative and does not represent a lot of dynamic thought," said Charendoff. "There's got to be more to a product than just 80 basic cards and a couple levels of chase cards dressed up with a little extra foil.

"We've fallen into very predictable patterns, and those patterns are not good for us. The sets very often will fail and give dealers and collectors one more reason to leave the industry."

The surviving companies realize that they must become more and more creative to attract customers. But very often, pushing the envelope in terms of creativity can also mean pushing the limits of profitability.

"It's kind of a catch-22 situation," said Krome's Bennington. "On the one hand, everyone's asking for more innovative products and more value in every pack. But that costs more dollars to provide, and with the products not being supported as well, it makes it difficult for manufacturers to attempt to go after those dollars."

Despite the troubles that have plagued the industry, there are signs of hope for manufacturers, dealers and collectors alike.

• Declining Licensing Fees – Yes, there's still competition among card companies as they pursue the hot properties, but the dollars being offered are much less than in the past.

No longer are companies willing, or able, to pay six-figure licensing fees to a movie studio for the rights to its next big movie. Comic book and fantasy art illustrators are finding they can't charge the same fees they have in recent years.

As these kinds of up-front fees go down, it makes it easier for companies to put more dollars into creativity and promotion, and removes the temptation to offer multiple sets of the same license in an attempt to cover its expenses.

• Fewer Products – Gone is the temptation to "roll the dice" with an idea for an entertainment card set. Today's surviving manufacturers realize they can no longer afford to put out sets unless there is an audience ready and waiting for the product.

As a result, virtually every card company surveyed said they plan on reducing their releases for '98.

"The events of recent years send a message that you can't simply put anything out and expect people to buy it," said Topps spokesman Marty Appel. "We're much more discriminating right now."

• New Innovations – Autographed insert cards, die-cuts, 3-D cards, oversized cards and numbered inserts are among the ideas utilized in many new entertainment card sets.

The goal of many manufacturers in '98 will be to keep the quantities down, and the quality up, thereby creating highly collectible products.

In addition, several companies are planning to launch products aimed at the young adult audience during the next year, and interest in entertainment cards in international markets is also increasing.

• Smarter Business Practices – "Too many people that used to be in this industry thought of it strictly in terms of numbers," said Caplan. "That's because their bonuses were based on meeting specific numbers. Guess what? Their numbers were wrong."

It has become clear that entertainment card companies can survive and be profitable by following a basic formula: Acquire the right license for the right amount of money, thoroughly survey your pre-sale accounts for an accurate estimate of sales, then print almost precisely to order.

The lack of a strong retail presence takes most of the guesswork out of determining demand, and it also reduces the risk of having to accept large numbers of returns.

Many companies also offer smaller case sizes (Inkworks offers cases as small as two display boxes, for instance) in order to entice more dealers to sample products without risking a lot of cash.

The people who are left standing in the entertainment card market are there because, for the most part, they genuinely love the business.

They realize they will never generate the kind of money that sports cards generate today – or that entertainment cards generated a few short years ago – but they still feel there is a viable market for cards that are basically designed for collectors to have fun with.

"People ask me why I'm involved with entertainment cards," said Caplan. "I have a ball with them! The difference between non-sport cards and sport cards is that our consumer still reads the backs of the cards, still cares what the cards look like more than they care what the price guides say the cards are worth. That's the fun of this business."

After four tough years, Caplan and many others that rely on sales of entertainment cards can only hope that things get a lot more fun in 1998.

THEY SAID IT...

Here's a sampling of what some of the major players in the industry had to say when asked to review the entertainment card market in 1997, as well as offer their predictions for next year.

Bob Byer, president, Sports Time:
1997 Analysis – "It was pretty much what we expected. We went into the year knowing it would be a challenge; we addressed those challenges and we feel that, overall, 1997 was a success for our company."
1998 Prediction – "I think 1998 can be a strong year as long as the licensors remain understanding and bear with the licensee, and the manufacturers continue working on a program to build the marketplace slowly and cautiously rather than putting out too many products."

Steve Charendoff, entertainment director, Fleer/SkyBox:
1997 Analysis – "Right now, the market's in a pretty tenuous state. There aren't as many products being released, which is probably a good thing. There aren't as many companies involved in making cards, which I also think is a good thing. But for those of us who are left, I don't think that we, as a group, have found the answers that we need to find in making this end of the card market work."
1998 Prediction – "I think there's cause for some optimism. The Marvel characters are great characters. The autograph cards we've done have gone over real well. We've had three straight sellouts of Babylon 5 products, and that property has the potential for even more growth."

Alan Gordon, president, Comic Images:
1997 Analysis – "It was disappointing, in terms of the number of available properties, the life cycle of good properties, the fact that we don't have a healthy trade right now. That's a shame because when I look at the cards that are out there, there's a lot of good stuff. If you took 20 card sets at random from this year, and 20 sets at random from 1994, the quality of products out there today is far superior."
1998 Prediction – "In 1998, you're going to see a much narrower focus – less product, high-quality cards. There's still some good stuff out there. The right properties still work."

Allan Caplan, president, Inkworks:
1997 Analysis – "The mess involving Marvel has hurt everybody else because people assume if Fleer/SkyBox can't make it, nobody can."
1998 Prediction – "There are some great licenses coming out in 1998, and as long as companies don't overproduce, it will be fun. It will turn around. Everything has its cycles."

John Vano, senior product manager, Upper Deck:
1997 Analysis – "When we stepped into 1997, we certainly had much higher expectations. The category did not grow at the rate that we had hoped."
1998 Prediction – "We're cautiously optimistic. There's potential for it to rebound, but a lot of that potential is based on how well the licensors are willing to cooperate with us in growing the category."

Jerry Bennington, product manager, Krome Productions:
1997 Analysis – "The biggest factor has been too many publishing companies trying to tap into the same existing customer base. Those customers have been overwhelmed. And not only are there a lot more companies out there, but some of those companies are putting out poor quality products."
1998 Prediction – "Everyone's going to lay low for a while. It's going to be our goal in '98 to slightly reduce the number of releases, but promote them more in advance and try and create some awareness and anticipation for our products."

Dino Frisella, president, Dart Flipcards:
1997 Analysis – "We started off the year with a very cautious approach because for the last two years the numbers have been dropping. We've gone back to a real formula when it comes to determining our print runs and we haven't gotten hurt. It means the bottom line is smaller, but we're not losing money."
1998 Prediction – "There aren't a whole lot of big licenses out there. One approach is to go with an older property, knowing we can sell 300 or 400 cases, but at least we won't be gambling on some untested property and try and pump out 2,000 cases."

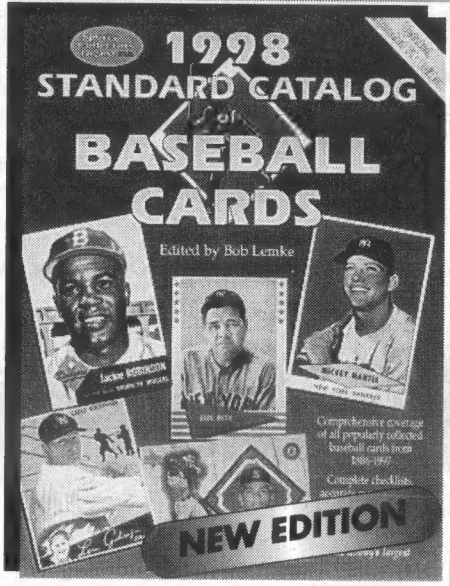
Pitch a Perfect Game!

with the 1998 Standard Catalog of Baseball Cards!



8-1/2x11 Softcover • 1,568 pages • 10,000+ photo • SB07 $39.95 Avail 9/97

Noted baseball card expert Bob Lemke has raised the standard for excellence in the baseball card collecting market!

He's compiled prices and checklists for you on more than 7,000 sets. And, he's given you histories on every set cataloged, a glossary of collecting terms and your very own card pricing tutorial!

The 1998 Standard Catalog of Baseball Cards loads the bases in your favor with

- More than 10,000 photos
- Cards from 1869 to present, featuring Topps, Donruss, Upper Deck, Fleer, Pinnacle, Pacific and more!
- Hundreds of never-before-cataloged sets and cards from every era
- Expanded coverage of foreign card sets featuring U.S. players

Every year competitors step up to the plate against the Standard and every year they strike out because the Standard Catalog of Baseball Cards just keeps getting bigger and better! In fact, the Philadelphia Daily News said that the 1997 edition was "the best one to date!" Imagine what they'll say this year when they see even more:

✔ regional issues ✔ police sets ✔ food issues
✔ coins ✔ stickers ✔ pennants and more!

Don't settle for anything less than the 1998 Standard Catalog of Baseball Cards!
